EARL RUSSELL DEAD.

A Brilliant Career that culminated in Early Death and Deception with Declining Years.

LONDON, May 25.—Earl Russell, died at 10:30 yesterday, at his residence at Richmond. Astounding symptoms and prostration commenced at two o'clock this afternoon.

Thus tough and anything but tractable apostle of Reform. Lord Earl Russell, died yesterday at the ripe age of eighty-nine years. A history of his life would be a history of English politics for almost three quarters of a century, for he entered public life early; came quickly to the front, and in opposition to the various governments, consistently has occupied a position of prominence in the political affairs of the British Empire. The third son of the sixth Duke of Bedford, by Georgiana, daughter of the fourth Viscount Torrington, he was born in Bedford street, Mayfair, August 18, 1792. His education began at Sandhurst and continued at Westminster School, was completed at the University of Edinburgh—then a notable center of liberal thought—under the especial direction of Thomas Brown and Dugald Stewart. The influence of the latter strongly tended to develop and confirm the liberal opinions which he inherited from his parents, and when he left the University his scheme of life was in great measure determined.

In the year 1818, having returned from the course of travel then deemed a necessary part and parcel of the liberal education of every young Englishman, he stood for one of the family burroughs, Taxiswick, and was duly returned to Parliament. Naturally he joined himself to the Whigs, then very much under a cloud and by a telling speech during the debate on the Foreign treaties (after the conclusion of the peace of 1815) brought himself fairly into notice. For a number of years he was a member of the Whig party, and was frequently called upon to speak in the House of Commons, and was often selected to represent the resolution of the Whigs—whether in the House of Lords or in the House of Commons. In 1820 he was elected Member of Parliament for the constituency of Belford (Bedford) and became a member of the royal hunting forest that extended to the Border. In the park are still preserved from slaughter some of the original wild cattle, supposed to be descended from the bulls of Bala.

Away seaward are seen the solitary Farne Islands, with its fine lighthouse, to warn mariners of those dangerous rocks, and little boats always ready to assist shipwrecked seamen. It was here that the noble Grace Darling and her aged father went to the rescue of the shipwrecked people of the Forfarshire.

During a number of years he was a member of the royal hunting forest of Belford.
